Summary

Business activity continues to expand, but leading indicators of economic growth suggest that the current strength of the UK recovery may not be sustained near term. Service sector activity is eased markedly, consumer confidence weakened and manufacturing export orders stalled in July.

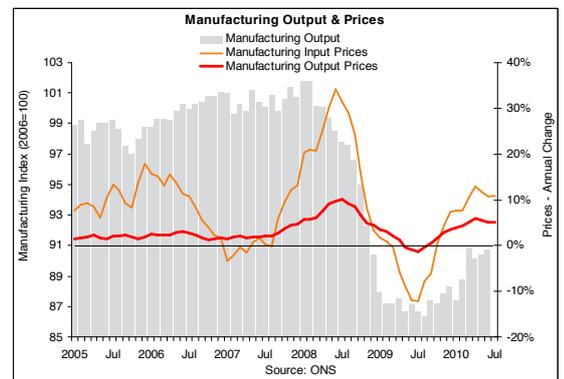

Economy

Interest rates

The Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee kept interest rates unchanged at 0.5% and maintained the asset purchase programme at £200 billion during its August meeting. Insights as to how the Committee sees monetary policy developing will be revealed in this week's release of the Quarterly Inflation Report, which will include updated GDP and inflation projections.

Manufacturing activity and prices

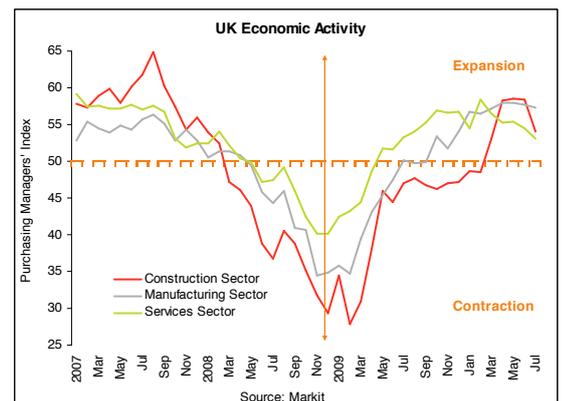

Manufacturing output rose by 0.3% in June compared to May and up 4.1% on a year ago. Manufacturers, in the first half of 2010, benefited from stronger domestic and overseas demand, and a more competitive exchange rate. Producer input prices fell 1% in July, though year-on-year input prices remain up 10.8%. During the first half of 2010, manufacturers took advantage of improved business activity to push through some price increases to support their margins in the face of rising costs. Output prices rose 0.1% in July and up 5% year-on-year.

Business activity

The PMI surveys for the construction, manufacturing and services sectors in July all point to slower UK growth ahead. Business confidence is falling, with companies' expectations about activity levels in the year ahead weakening. Lower confidence has been linked to concerns that the austerity measures announced by the government will dampen growth prospects.

Manufacturing activity continued to expand solidly in July, though the manufacturing PMI eased slightly to 57.3 from 57.6 in June. Companies reported fuller domestic order books, but overseas sales growth stagnated. Price pressures remained elevated in July, but they are easing. Companies reported a range of raw materials as up in price, including chemicals, electronic components, energy, food products, metals, packaging, paper and timber. Output prices also rose, as manufacturers passed some of the increases in input costs to their clients. Services sector growth continued to lose momentum in July. Both activity and new business rose at their slowest pace in over a year. The PMI index dropped to 53.1, down from 54.4 in June. Weak demand from the public sector appears to have hit growth. Cost pressures continued to soften in July and strong competition ensured that output charges rose only slightly.

Commodities

Oil prices rose 5% in the week to Friday to $81 per barrel of Brent crude. Copper climbed comfortably back above $7,400, boosted by stronger equities. Nickel also bounced back, rising 7% to $22,085/ ton. Aluminium prices climbed above $2,200. However, steel prices continued to fall back, as demand from China is slowing. The global steel price index recorded a 3% decline last week.

Exchange rates

The Pound strengthened against the Dollar last week, rising 2% to £/$1.597, mainly due to Dollar weakness rather than Sterling strength. The Pound held stable against the Euro at £/€1.2017.

Construction

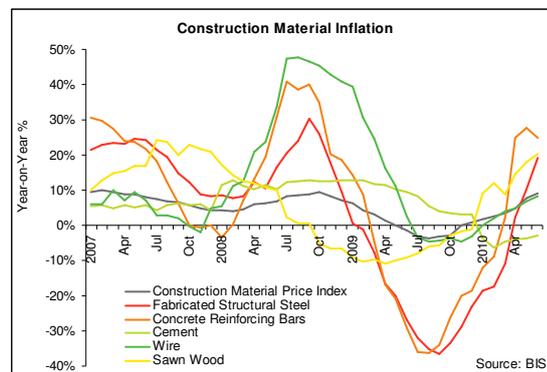

Construction activity

Construction activity continued to expand in July, but at a slower pace. The construction PMI eased to 54.1 from 58.4 in June. New orders continued to grow, but at a slower rate. Residential construction remains the strongest sector, while commercial construction increased at a faster pace than civil engineering. Employment fell despite increased output. Similarly, usage of sub-contractors by UK construction companies also decreased, with availability subsequently rising. Input prices increased substantially in July, due to higher raw material prices. Confidence in the sector weakened modestly, reflecting worries over public sector spending cuts.

Construction materials

Construction material prices jumped 1.1% in June and up 9% on a year ago. This is the strongest annual increase since October 2008. Material costs rose sharpest for non-residential work, up 9.6% year-on-year. Fabricated structural steel prices jumped 5% during the month and up 19.2% compared to a year ago. Concrete reinforcing bars fell 3% in June, but were up 25% on last year. Precast concrete prices held stable in June, but were down by 1% on last year. Cement prices were also flat in June, but down 3% year-on-year. Sawn wood prices were up 2% during the month and rose 20.3% on last year.

Commercial property

The CBRE Monthly Index reveals that total returns for All Property in July rose by 0.9%, down from 1.1% growth in June. Capital growth eased to 0.4% in July, with property values now 7.2% up on a year ago. Offices remained the strongest performing sector, with total returns up 1.2% and capital growth of 0.7%. The sector was buoyed by Central London's performance, while outside of Central London markets were significantly weaker. Rents in the Central London market continued to improve, rising 0.3% in July. Since the start of the year, Central London offices have seen growth of 0.8%, compared to a 1% fall in the wider market. Retail property total returns stood at 0.7% in July, with capital growth of 0.3%. Industrials capital values rose 0.2% in July and total returns were up 0.8%. Year to date industrials lag the other sectors, with total returns of 8% compared with 11.2% and 13.3% for All Retail and All Office respectively.

Looking ahead

The quarterly Inflation Report will contain the Bank of England's latest assessment of growth and inflation, and will give important insights into how monetary policy is likely to develop in the years ahead. The British Retail Consortium's retail sales monitor for July is expected to show that sales growth remained robust, supported by good weather and discounting. The RICS's July housing market survey is likely to show that housing market activity is relatively muted currently, as consumer confidence is weakening and credit conditions remain tight. The supply/demand balance continues to move more in favour of buyers, thereby limiting house price gains. Labour market data should show that unemployment fell further in July. Earnings growth is expected to remain subdued, given that companies still face a challenging business environment.
